

In September 2017, Mental Health and Addiction Services for children and youth along with mental health services offered in schools have been restructured to make them more accessible to this clientele.

This service delivery model called Integrated Service Delivery (ISD) will serve children and youth with significant emotional, social and/or mental health needs. This innovative approach makes it possible for departments and agencies (Education and Early Childhood Development, Health, Social Development, Justice and Public Safety, school districts, and the Regional Health Networks) to work together in order to provide the right service, at the right intensity and at the right time.

At the heart of the ISD model are the Child and Youth teams (C & Y teams), which are composed of school and mental health psychologists, school and mental health social workers, addiction workers, learning support teachers, and a clinical coordinator. These teams will provide services around a cluster of schools.

To help you understand this information, we thought it would be useful to include the clusters of schools associated with the six Anglophone C & Y teams in the region. The phone number to access the reception office of each team is also indicated.

For more information on the ISD model, we encourage you to visit our web site at:
